FOURTH SUNDAY OF EASTER

PASTOR'S CORNER

We Can be Mistaken but Still Loved and Appreciated

It is rightly said that some of the most successful people are those who learn from their mistakes and thus grow in virtue. We all make mistakes and sometimes plenty of them; so did the saints. But they had a choice then and we have the same choice today: We can take the negative path and beat ourselves up, or blame someone else, or we can take the positive path and ask, "What is God teaching me right now?" When your children or grandchildren mess up, don't you ask them, "What did you learn?"? Mistakes are teachable moments often coming from an all-loving God. This is why you should be never afraid of making mistakes, because God loves us through them too. Every mistake, no matter how big or small, is a door to encountering God the teacher.

We sometimes obsess over the "little things" (i.e., our mistakes). Of course, details matter, but we often focus on the wrong details, which we should leave to God alone. No one thrives in perpetual uncertainty, whether they make a big or a small mistake, but God can spice up our lives in ways we can neither imagine nor expect. And all you have to do is to leave that place of darkness in order to learn from your own gaffes while seeing beneath the surface. This is often the key to discovering God's will, because we are on a journey and we make choices: some are well made, but others we wish we could take back and do all over again, for as a Jewish rabbi once wrote:

"Yet the darkness of [human] potentiality is the hotbed of anxiety.

There is always more than one path to go, and we are forced be free -- we are free against our will and have the audacity to choose, rarely knowing how or why. Our failures glare like flashlights all the way, and what is right lies underground. We are in the minority in the great realm of being, and with a genius for adjustment we frequently seek to join the multitude. We are in the minority within our own nature, and in the agony and battle of passions we often choose to envy the beast. We act as if the animal kingdom were our lost paradise, to which we are trying to return for moments of delight, believing that it is the animal state in which our happiness consists." (Heschel, Man is Not Alone).

But keep in mind that the best news is this: Our God is a God of second chances
